Health Leaders for Global Community Impact

A High-Impact Scholarship Initiative for University of Haifa International Master's Program in Global Health Leadership (MPH)

Background & Rationale

Across the developing world, fragile health systems, unequal access to care, and the effects of conflict and displacement continue to undermine health outcomes. Addressing these challenges requires leaders who can think systemically and translate knowledge into effective policy and practice. Access to advanced public health education remains limited. For many talented professionals from under-resourced populations, the barrier is financial. Without targeted support, future leaders are excluded from the training needed to strengthen health systems.

At the University of Haifa, education is deeply connected to the world's challenges and to the responsibility to address them. We are therefore seeking philanthropic partners to help bridge educational and opportunity gaps by funding a full scholarship cohort in the International Master's in Global Health Leadership program (MPH) for outstanding professionals from under-resourced populations. Our vision is to create a connected global community of future leaders who learn, live, and experience Haifa's academic excellence and cultural diversity together, united by a shared commitment to advancing innovative and equitable health policies and systems in their communities and beyond.

Program: Master's in Global Health Leadership (MPH)

The program prepares professionals to address health inequities and strengthen health systems, particularly in low-resource and rapidly changing contexts, focusing on population health, public health policy, and leadership skills grounded in evidence-based practice. Through state-of-the-art knowledge and practical training, students learn to manage comprehensive, cross-cutting, multi-sectoral health issues on local and global scales. Graduates assume meaningful careers in public health institutions, NGOs, and international agencies working to improve health outcomes and promote equity at both community and systems levels. The program curriculum aligns with the standards and guidelines of Public Health graduate studies in the U.S, Canada and Europe.
